

Putting website design and media experience to work for Anchorage, Alaska.

Expect quick, affordable, professional and friendly service for website design, domain names and hosting.

From planning your website project, purchasing your domain and hosting, designing your website and launching it to the world, AKSYS makes it easy. Although we provide services to clients across the country, web design clients in Anchorage, Alaska have the unique benefit of working more closely with a local website designer.

Anchorage clients can further benefit from local writing and photography services.

If you'd like to be quoted on a new website design or an update to your existing website, please contact AKSYS in Anchorage, Alaska. Use our contact page online, www.aksys.co, or call (907) 441-9700.

What's involved in website design?

A lot!

Fortunately, website design clients in Anchorage benefit from one-on-one attention from web design & delivery manager, Justin Matley. His years of website design experience and willingness to listen to clients and create an easy working relationship is invaluable. For those who reside outside of Anchorage, Alaska, if you're nearby then expect a visit. Otherwise, phone calls, email, perhaps even Skype can be utilized to plan and execute your website design project. We do it all the time.

Communication is the key. We pride ourselves on educating clients. It goes with the territory. Complete website design can seem complicated, and we share our knowledge readily. We'll lay out the steps involved with purchasing a domain name, setting up hosting, and we'll give advice on maximizing your website's visibility on the web.

To get started Justin will discuss your website needs. Everyone seems to have something special they'd like to accomplish. If your existing website only needs a tune-up and a fresh look, he can construct a plan to give you the best bang for your buck. If you need a new website or total overhaul, the process is the same and just as simple.

After a brief meeting he'll be able to construct a detailed plan of the website design project. Included in the plan will be cost estimates and an expected delivery date. Any extra items that need to be purchased will be listed separately (ex. domain name, hosting, stock photography). This plan and the costs ensure everyone is on the same page. We're a team.

Once the plan and estimates are approved and any down payment collected, AKSYS will begin the website project. We'll be in touch along the way to gather necessary content and ask for approval of individual aspects of the website such as graphics, colors, logo, etc. It's important for website design clients to be easy to reach and active in the process.

For Anchorage, Alaska clients, on-site photography is an option. If included in the website plan we'll schedule the visit and perform the video shoot or photography of your establishment, staff or products. This is the fun part, the direct interaction with our design client!

Eventually the website will be complete or near complete. With client approval it will be launched to the world and we'll follow up with search engine optimization tweaks and training for you or your staff. That's right, training.

In a manner of speaking, AKSYS prefers to provide clients with the keys to the car. Unlike some web developers, we believe that clients need control of the domain, hosting and website. It's their right as the purchaser of our products and service.

If a client wants the ability to edit and maintain their own website, that's our specialty. And, even if they want AKSYS to perform regular updates to the website or continue making design improvements, we'll still provide login information and basic training in the event the client ever changes gears.

A little about Justin Matley

Justin has lived in Anchorage, Alaska for approximately five years. Much of that time he acted as the managing editor for Alaska Coast Magazine and Alaska SnowRider, both based out of Anchorage. He has actively pursued adventure and tourism activities in and around Anchorage. He has written numerous feature articles on Anchorage events, explored and written about communities and events all across Alaska, photographed outdoor activities in the backcountry, written numerous event guides in their entirety, interviewed athletes and some of Alaska's fondest residents and the list goes on. His range of experience includes website design and planning, newspaper publishing, collaborating in community website projects, producing high grade print products and assisting start-up businesses with their marketing. He is also an Army veteran.

Use the CONTACT page on our website or call (907) 441-9700 to get started!